WIN IT!

We've teamed up with Carling to offer one lucky reader and two mates tickets to see Velvet Revolver live at Carling Academy Brixton on 25th March.

For more information go to carling.com

To win email your name, number and address to editorial@whos-jack.co.uk - winners will be chosen at random

Jack has also been learning about Alessandro Esteri and can offer you a free copy of his new book 'BIG - mail junk'.

BIG is a collection of hilarious 'grow your manhood' type junk mail - set out in poetry book style. It will make you laugh out loud, and if like the Jack team you constantly get junk through urging you to worry about the size of your shlong you will connect with this book no probs!

Also if you are in need of something to make the working hours go faster go to the associated website - www.hmg.it a blog without topics, administrator, censor - basically you can write what you want and in 6 months Alessandro is planning to publish a book with all the texts.

Bunchu Yakitori - Japanese fast food on the Thames

When we were told that this South-bank based restaurant serves Japanese 'fast-food', we groaned at the thought of being perched precariously on bar stools, silently staring at plates of soggy, miserable looking sushi spinning around a conveyor belt. With one eye sharking your next 'catch' as it does its sad lap around the racecourse, you hardly have time to swallow, let alone savour what you're actually eating - Anglo-Japanese fast food, right?

Huffah! No such thing. This lively, informal restaurant perched above the Thames within the
